Learning Styles

While learning styles have made education far more synergistic for students, I find the system is more of a starting point than a fully fledged infrastructure. I myself am a visual and hands-on learner primarily, but after observations I have found I tend to learn in a 'mycelial' fashion, spreading in many directions from multiple viewpoints. This I attribute primarily to ADHD, since its benefits are many it can easily become an incomprehensible swarm of information. So, instead of learning styles I like to think in learning ecologies, that are interwoven, shifting, and can relate to emotion as well.
